By November 2024, John will be thirty-four years old, with fourteen years of seniority and self-dedication to the humanitarian & development career. An islander by birth, John was born and brilliantly passed his earliest education in Idjwi (Eastern DRC) until 15, the elder of the middle sons of Miruho Rutaganda (surnamed Fungulo) and Ntawenderundi Solange. From he's early secondary age, John fast committed to understanding the momentous philosophies of societal civilizations, the path that shaped all the rest of his dynamic life. John has had a fiercer and more challenging journey, but no matter what thornier path he set out on, he always proven outstanding serenely and optimistic skills, with only one sight set on victory. In everything, he learnt to not dwell on adversity, but using pardon and love as the inner motivation of doing more good for those who due to their pessimism always wished to pull him down. Due to those tougher battles he experienced, John has a greater sensitivity and deeper understanding of humanity's soreness, which fills him with more kindness and compassion and justifies his tireless commitment to the common good and shared happiness.

In his Quote: "There's an unique way to re-propel a brighter and plenipotential world for humanity but many ways to keep it still in chaos". In this quote, John sums up his faith and beliefs in the magic power of humanistic will and collective consciousness in the search for a better world. From insularity to the modern enterprise of humanistic civilizations, he rises not only to fulfill a deeper imperative duty of repairing and perfecting of the contemporary world but to fashion, bequeathing and perpetuating an universal humanistic legacy for future African and world generations.
